The co-editors of CPN would like everyone to pay particular attention to the following policies regarding your dues to the ICPS.

All correspondence regarding dues, address changes and missing issues should be sent to Mrs. Pat Hansen, 3321 Hamell Rd., Fullerton, CA 92635. DO NOT SEND TO THE CO-EDITORS. Checks for subscriptions and reprints should be made payable to CSUF FOUNDATION-ICPS.

All material for publication, comments and general correspondence about your plants, field trips or special noteworthy events relating to CP should be directed to one of the co-editors. We are interested in all news related to carnivorous plants and rely on the membership to supply us with this information so that we can share it with others.

Views expressed in this publication are those of the authors, not necessarily the editorial staff.

Copy deadline for the June issue is April 1, 1985.

News and Views

NICK ARGUIMBAU (149 Purdue, Kensington, CA 94708) writes: I was greatly entertained by the story in California Living (see lit. review), about insectivorous plants. As a boy in Massachusetts I spent a great deal of time tramping through a large swamp near my home, and located and studied four local species of insectivorous plants—one pitcher plant, two species of sundew, and a little plant which I recall either as butterwort or bladderwort. Unless a miracle happens, the bog in which these all grew is going to be destroyed shortly for the sake of a shopping center.

I also spent years as a boy hybridizing daylilies (Hemerocallis) and learned a great deal of biology in the process. One of the techniques I developed for the daylilies might be of interest to you. Daylily seasons stretch over the period of June through August in Massachusetts, with some blooms as early as May or as late as September. Some varieties set seed with considerable difficulty but have fertile pollen. The individual flowers last only a day. Thus, a complete hybridizing program is impossible unless one has a way of preserving pollen from early-flowering varieties for use with late-flowering and for storing pollen over winter. The following method did the trick:

I would remove stamens early in the morning before the bees got into the flowers and carefully strip the pollen, using the tip of a nail as the tool, from the anthers onto a creased, smooth sheet of paper, then transfer into a gelatine capsule, which could be stored in a jar with desiccant. This dried pollen would remain fertile over winter, and could also be mailed across the country to other hybridizers, to have a national, literal "gene pool." The pollen was used successfully as many as eight months after collection. It was necessary to separate pollen from anthers, and use a jar with desiccant refrigerated, incidentally, to prevent molding. I kept literally hundreds of varieties of pollen in labeled capsules all in a single jar in a tolerant mom's refrigerator, and did most hybridization with that, rather than with fresh pollen.

I don't see any reason why this technique wouldn't work to solve the problem you note about the large numbers of plants blooming at the same time needed for hybridizing insectivorous plants.

JOHN H. HUMMER (Hummers Insectivorous Gardens, 1705 N. Quebec St., Arlington, VA 22207) writes: I have had in the back of my mind, for some time, the idea of starting an insectivorous plant bank, run and operated by the production staff of CPN and supported through either or both donations and dues, or even grants, if received. The idea would be to either rent a facility and grounds for such an operation or, hopefully, obtain, through sale, purchase of some land, or even maybe the use of some land by a "generous" landowner or conservation organization. The possibilities are endless. True, there would probably be substantial costs involved, but I would be willing to lend as much support to the existence of such an operation, were it to be created. It would certainly take majority support of not only the production staff, but also members of the ICPS.

What I would envision, is both a facility with refrigeration units to store either excess, or surplus numbers of plant rhizomes too numerous to keep outside, where they'd be kept cooled for an indefinite period of time. Plants would be priced according to their abundance and obtainability in the wild or elsewhere. In fact, the operation could very well be supported mainly by the sale of the plants, as all plants sent to the 'Plant Bank' would be donated! Land would house outside-growing plants of various types.

Let's face it, anyone, like you or myself, is GREATLY concerned for the future existence of the ever-regressing plants we so dearly love. I know of NO ONE organization that is dedicated specifically to save, or create future wildlife refuges for Sarracenia, Drosera, or Pinguicula. It is up to US, as concerned members of the insectivorous plant world to do something about it, rather than to hear about the terror of another marshland being drained for agricultural use, the county being drained and robbed of another several thousand pitcher plants. . . it's an old story. How much longer are we going to continue to sit back and say, "Oh, well, it's just a matter of time before they're all gone . . ."

As I mentioned earlier, the "Plant Bank" could very well be self-supported, should enough plants be sold, and enough money brought in, but even without self-support, I think that it is the duty of CP growers everywhere to make an honest effort towards a beneficial effort such as this. Otherwise, I would question the sincerity of other growers toward their REAL interests in these ever-dwindling plant forms. Your comments and feelings on this subject are greatly appreciated, and any other further reflections are welcomed!

P.S. I would be willing to lend as much help as I could to the existence of such a project.

DAVID LANE (62 Oak St., Dover, NH 03820) writes: I am writing to bring to your attention three items that may be of interest to CPN readers.

The first item is a humorous one rivaling that of the "Man-Eating Tree of Madagascar" (Pietropaolo and Pietropaolo, The World of Carnivorous Plants, 1974, p. 21) and other legends. This one is a very large CP plant that preys on people's lives in the theatre. I have enclosed a recent newspaper article describing the star of the award-winning musical "The Little Shop of Horrors," a CP named Audrey II that eats people, talks and sings. Note in the photo how the faces of people previously consumed reappear in the plant's flowers! I also enclose a copy of a magazine article describing the CP in the 1981 BBC remake of the film "The Day of the Triffids." It was shown in this country on September 1 on the Arts and Entertainment Network (a cable TV channel). In this version which closely follows the classic science fiction novel by John Wyndham, the Triffids bear some resemblance to Sarracenia leucophylla (with an extensible tongue). Triffids, however, can walk, communicate among themselves and can sting and kill people up to ten feet away! These are the same two fictional plants that appear on the front cover of the British CP Society Journal (Autumn, 1983 and Spring, 1984 issues). It seems that the real CP that do exist are insufficient for the purposes of writers and producers.

The second item is more serious. In the last issue of CPN 13, p. 32, Don Clements asked about literature reports and observations of forked flower stalks in Drosera rotundifolia in other parts of its range. Gray's Manual of Botany (8th ed., corrected printing, 1970, p. 730) under that species describes the flower stalk as "scape (rarely forking) . . . " About a week before that issue arrived I found two populations in southern New Hampshire with forked scapes. In these populations, forked and unforked scapes were intermixed. In fact, I found single plants bearing both. The forked scapes seemed to be more robust (both taller and thicker) than the unforked ones. The degree of forking varied but to a limited extent. I wondered about the phenology of flowering on the forked scapes—whether two or more flowers on different branches are open at the same time.

I also wondered whether this feature was heritable, so I took the liberty (see below) of collecting about a dozen forked scapes which represented a small fraction of the total number. I sent the extracted seed to the CPN Seed Bank so growers more experienced than I can evaluate the progeny. The site was part of a power line right-of-way used extensively by trail bike riders. In fact, fresh ruts have just appeared only a couple of feet from one population. Also, the power company appears to be spot spraying any shrub or tree in the right-of-way over a certain height with herbicide. A dead shrub stands about ten feet from the same population. So, in this single instance, I felt justified in collecting some seed.

The last item is a suggestion. Would it be possible to set up a slide bank somewhat like the Seed Bank? I know various methods of slide distribution have been tried in the past, but it occurred to me that a bank of duplicate slides might work and also generate revenue for the society. Perhaps other horticultural societies have worked this out. I'm thinking mainly of clearly labeled 2 x 2 inch color slides of whole plants either natural or cultivated, not necessarily in flower. Originals could be duplicated by the photographer and submitted for credit or cheaply by the bank and made available at modest cost. I find it curious that as far as I know, no commercial source of CP among those listed in each March issue of CPN sells such slides, while Carolina Biological Supply Co. and other photographic suppliers, including museums and universities, sell many sets of similar slides. Of course, the question of reproduction rights will have to be answered and it may be difficult to find someone willing to take on the burden.

COL LUCK (Secretary of the Brisbane Carnivorous Plant Society, P.O. Box 320, Archerfield, 4108, Qld., Australia) writes: I have been instructed by my society to write and thank your organization for their prompt and efficient reply to our request for articles for our newsletter "Sundew."

After reading the article submitted by D.E. Schnell (on Dionaea), it was decided by the society that we would like to donate a trophy for the best Australian plant at your upcoming show (in San Francisco). If this meets with your approval could you inform me at the above address as to the necessary arrangements you would like to make.

(Arrangements were made with Anthony Rea, manager of the Carnivorous plant section to receive the trophy and make the award in August, 1985.)

LEN & SANDRA McCANDLESS (109 Woogaroo St., Goodna, 4300 Brisbane, Australia) Write: We enclose an update on the Peter Tsang collection as it originally appeared in the Hoya Society International Journal: the curator of the gardens, Ross McKinon, has decided that because of the vast nature of the collections and the many duplications, he will offer some of the plants for sale to the various Brisbane societies and the proceeds of the sales will be passed to Peter's daughter, Tiki.

J.C. MOORE, SR. (112 Deborah Dr. E., Mobile, AL 36619) writes: About two to three weeks ago, I received a call from a chemical company in one of our northern stats inquiring about a reliable source of Sarracenia purpurea. When I informed the caller that I could probably provide these plants and other species, I found out that he wanted five hundred (500) pounds of "American Purple Pitcher Plants." The calling party seemed a little uninformed and unaware that there are numerous varieties and subspecies of S. purpurea as well as hybrids. Since he ran short of his 500 pound order due to this regular sources running short, he called me to help him.

This chemical company was interested in obtaining plants, washed free of soil and dried but not dehydrated, for extracting a pharmaceutical needed in their work.

The following morning, I called this gentleman back using the 800 phone number he gave me along with the name of the drug they were after. In this conversation, I informed this person that I would have no part in a long term project providing so many plants even if he had discovered the "Elixir" of immortal youthful life. I did agree to send him several hundred pounds of Sarracenias of mixed species and hybrids from an area that I knew was being destroyed in the course of construction. After about a week, three people, running ahead of machinery, were able to gather and wash free of soil about seven large burlap bags of air-dried and weed-free Sarracenia rhizomes with a combined weight of 186 pounds. I sent these off to him after harvest.

While this harvest was in progress, I inspected as many places as possible where S. purpurea was observed. I found only pock-marked fields and remnants of mature plants and a few seedlings. These fields were of mixed species and not in any immediate danger. Only the S. purpurea were removed! Many of the plants in the field were crushed by collectors' vehicles and they left litter of various types. Fortunately, some of this litter had names and addresses of local and out-of-state individuals and some of these names are familiar to me.

I'm happy to report that at least 186 pounds of Sarracenias are not destroyed but are going to a pharmaceutical company which may result in some good. It's obvious from my report that many habitats of CP are being destroyed due to greed and ignorance which is bringing my blood to a boiling point!

I am alone and helpless as the Sarracenias, but united with you, the task is barely within the grasp of hope. Please let me know if your society has any ideas on what we can do. I am ready to listen. Unless there is some state and federal legislation and those laws can be enforced, we will get exactly what we deserve.

We cannot recover the Passenger Pigeon, the Carolina Parakeet and who knows what else. We can cultivate plants of known value; but once their natural undisturbed habitat is altered or destroyed, the greenhouse, botanical gardens, zoos and art galleries are a poor and more fragile substitute for a walk through the woods.

GREGORY SHANOS (160 Budlong Ave., Warwick, RI 02888) writes: I thought of an idea while reading your method of growing Drosophyllum from seed. Before planting the seeds, they should be wetted and immersed in Rootone F, a root stimulating hormone and fungicide. My theory is that the fungicide should provide protection from damping off of the seed or seedling while the root stimulating hormones might promote and accelerate root formation from the exposed endosperm. Do you think this idea is worthwhile? Try it and see.

PHIL SHERIDAN (5729 S. 2nd St., Arlington, VA 22204) writes: I was with a group of biologists from George Mason University and we were mapping a forested area on Andros Island in the Bahamas. In the first two weeks of January 1984, we had several opportunities to visit some inland fresh water blue holes. Two types of Utricularia were found: U. purpurea and U. gibba. These blue holes vary in size but they go straight down for about 300 feet! The diameter on one was about 150 ft. The Utricularia were found growing on the edges of the blue holes intermingled with some kind of algal masses. Interestingly, the soil here is limestone and the edges of the blue holes were pure limestone, so I imagine the water is alkaline.

While we were in the Bahamas, we camped on the beach near Fortar Biological Research Station. On an adjoining road between the station and our camp, a small colony of Pinguicula pumila was found by our botanist, Dr. Bradley. This colony was the only site for this plant. Basically, Andros Island is very similar to southern Florida. Also, Dr. Bradley mentioned that G.R. Proctor introduced pitcher plants to a sphagnum bog in Jamaica about ten years ago and the plants were doing very well. This location was near a biology field station. Additional plants there were flytraps, sundews as well as the pitcher plants. Also, D. capillaris was found there and although it is very rare, it is a true native.

Here in Virginia our club is basically a loose group of four individuals. There is John Hummer, Jim Darlyk, Dave Butler and myself. John and I frequently get together since we only live a mile or two apart. Jim is a recent addition to our group, but is very enthusiastic about the plants. Dave joins me once in a while for a trip to New Jersey or the Carolinas. We all grow a lot of Sarracenia with a good representation of Nepenthes and Drosera. I'm always headed out looking for CP and I usually manage to drag somebody along once in a while. I have a good friend near Richmond, Bill Schull, who has joined me on many trips in Virginia and elsewhere. Bill has been collecting the plants for about the past seven years and has a nice collection of Sarracenia, Dionaea and Drosera.

CP BOG AT THE FULLERTON ARBORETUM

by Leo C. Song, Jr.

INTRODUCTION

Carnivorous plants (CP) have fascinated people for generations and it has been a challenge for botanic gardens and arboreta to successfully exhibit them. Since these plants are strange and not well known, they fall prey to casual (random) and intentional theft. Botanic gardens the author has visited have CP behind glass barriers or in glass cases (Kew and Paris), especially where the plants are small. This puts a physical limit on the larger plants, such as Sarracenia. During the early planning stages of the Fullerton Arboretum, it was decided to create an artificial bog where CP could be exhibited in a totally open area.

The Fullerton Arboretum, located in the northeast quadrant of the campus of California State University, Fullerton is in the middle of a formerly productive area of citrus and avocado. The climate is of the Mediterranean type (warm dry summers, cool wet winters). Not considering water, the climate is favorable for most CP, especially Sarracenia. Humidity during the Sarracenia growing season is not as high as that in their native areas, but with sufficient water available, there has not been any problem growing them under lath.

Water quality is a problem. A source of high quality (low mineral content, especially low sodium, calcium and magnesium) water had to be found. This was solved by a pressurized reverse osmosis system with a production capacity of about 1,500 gallons a day. Since the system also produces "waste" water, which is about 10% higher in total dissolved solids (TDS), a use had to be found for it. Rather than dump it down a drain, it was allowed to run into the recirculating water system partially compensating for water loss through evaporation and leakage.

CONSTRUCTION

The bog is located beside the upper lake, but at a higher level. This was to avoid the poorer quality water from the lake from filtering into the bog. To imitate the natural conditions, the bog is not kept full of water, but is allowed to partially dry out between waterings. This serves several purposes. One is that oxygen is pulled into the soil as the water level drops. Also Sarracenia should not be constantly waterlogged. Since the soil is not constantly wet, algae and snails are not a problem. These were introduced by water birds and were a problem when the bog was constantly full of water.

The type of lining used was clay soil that was compacted in a layer about 2 to 3 feet thick. Slow percolation will prevent anerobic conditions from occuring at the lower levels of the soil and would closely

JOE MAZRIMAS would like to report the results of the San Francisco County Flower Show in August, 1984. It turned out to be a crowd pleaser to thousands of people because of the fantastic display of CP situated on a wall of sphagnum moss bisected with a waterfall. There were 51 entries brought in by 7 exhibitors. The exhibitors were: Louise Avila, Ray Triplitt, George Rea, Larry Logoteta, Glenn Greenawalt, Mickey Urdea and Joe Mazrimas. Louise Avila won best of show with a splendid Nepenthes truncata plant. Another rare plant was N. hamatus grown by Ray Triplitt which clearly showed the clawed peristome. (See photos, right)

Those of us who like to grow some of our CP in living sphagnum moss may order it for $6.70 for a 3½ cu. ft. bale. Ask for the bale to be shipped in a plastic bag to preserve moisture. Shipped to California, it costs $6.00 by UPS. The address: Mosserlee Co., P.O. Box 437, Millston, WI 54643. Phone: (715) 284-2296.

A soil mix of washed plaster sand and peat moss in equal proportions was used as the fill. This was topped off with an equal mixture of peat moss and silica sand. The bog was filled with water and allowed to stand for a few months, giving the soil time to settle and age.

PLANTING

The first planting was made spring, 1978 and consisted of Sarracenia alata, S. leucophylla, S. flava, Sarracenia hybrids, Dionaea muscipula, and Drosera × 'California Sunset'. A problem was encountered almost immediately. Waterbirds began to pull the plants out as well as destroying the pitchers to get the trapped insects. Weeds, such as cattails and sedges, began to grow. These were removed by hand. To stabilize the soil, a species of creeping sedge was introduced via seed and clumps. Within two years, the entire surface was covered. Due to persistently high water levels in the summer of 1979, many of the original plants died. It was also decided to construct a shade structure over the bog. Shade cloth of 55% was used.

As clones of Sarracenia were divided in the Biology Department's CP collection, extra material was planted in the bog. Planting them was a simple matter of cutting through the sedge mat, digging a small trench, placing the clump with roots extended and replacing the mat. Most of the planting was done during the winter to early spring so that they would be in place when growth started. Within two years after planting out, most Sarracenia regain and even surpass their original potted size.

Occasional losses occur due to rot, but for the majority of the plants, few diseases have affected them. Thrips are treated with Diazinon (R)* or Cygon (R)* while the water level is below the overflow drain level to avoid pesticide contamination of the lake system.

During 1984, Drosera × 'California Sunset' was introduced. It has generally failed to thrive. Dionaea has not survived for more than a year. Further introductions are planned, especially with the new watering schedule. Other species of Drosera will be tried as they become available. Additional "fine tuning" will include more plantings of Sarracenia F-1 hybrids and species.

Review of Recent Literature

Heinrich, G. Laser micorprobe mass analyzer ion analysis of the trapping slimes of carnivorous plants. Biochem. Physiol. Pflanz. (BPP) 179(1/2): 129-143 1984.

Fingerprint spectra of the anions and cations in the trapping slimes of 7 Drosera species, of Drosophyllum, of 3 Pinguicula species and Nepenthes alata were analyzed. These slimes contained magnesium and calcium in higher concentrations than potassium and sodium. The predominant anion was chloride.

Karlsson, P.S. and B. Carlsson. Why does Pinguicula vulgaris trap insects? New Phytol. 97(1): 25-30 1984.

Plants were fed agar blocks containing different combinations of 3 nutrient solutions: nitrogen, phosphate and micronutrients. The controls were either not fed at all or with real insects. The result was that only phosphate had any significant effect on plant biomass. Nitrogen caused an increase in the root mass over the leaf mass while the reverse was found when all 3 nutrients were presented. The 3-nutrient solution affected the nitrogen-phosphate content of these Pinguicula plants. There wasn't any significant effect with the micronutrients alone. It was concluded that phosphate is the most important nutrient for growth of this plant.

Stewart, J. The Tender Trap. California Living Magazine. San Francisco Sunday Examiner and Chronicle. Oct. 14, 1984.

The author introduces three local Bay Area growers of carnivorous plants and describes the methods they use to find and nurture them. They are Judith Finn, a horticulturist at the UC Berkeley Botanical Gardens, Ray Triplett, a San Bruno grower of rare Nepenthes from Borneo and the Philippines and Joe Mazrimas, co-editor of CPN. They all have stories to tell on how they got started and what they think of their mysterious hobby.

Zachariah, K. 1983. Ascocarp induction in a natural auxotroph of a predatory fungus. Can. J. Bot. 61 :3262-3266.

Most predatory fungi have very simple culture requirements and can be grown in relatively simple acqueous solutions. However, Arthrobotrys dactyloides requires several specific amino acids to initiate the sexual process. DES Zachariah, K. 1983. Growth responses of isolated knobs of Dactylaria ellipsospora. Can. J. Microbiol. 29:1295-1300.

The adhesive knob traps of this species can be detached from their hyphal stalks and cultured in isolation. This allows the sequence of various hyphal and reproductive structures regenerated to be studied as well as nutritional culture requirements at various stages. DES Zachariah, K. and J.R. Victor. 1983. A natural auxotroph of a nematode-trapping fungus. Can. J. Bot. 61:3255-3261.

The nutritional requirements of Arthrobotrys dactyloides (see other review by principal author in this section).

Zachariah, K. 1983. Growth responses to nutrients of an auxotroph and a prototroph of a predatory fungus. Antonie van Leeuwenhoek 49:563-569.

In addition to nutritional requirements of Arthrobotrys dactyloides described in two other papers authored or co-authored by Zachariah and mentioned in this section, the organism grew best with sucrose as a C-source and responded strongly to phospholipids. DES

NOTICE

Due to technical difficulties, John Ladnier (N&V, Sept. CPN, p. 59) will be unable to fill orders for plants. The editors have been informed that money for unfilled orders will be returned. Do not send any more orders.
